Who, me?

Feb. 18th, 2008 at 11:13 AM

Yes, I have already ordered mine. And an extra for when the first one wears out.

After all, who knows how long I might be required to wear it?

WAUGH!

...

I might even let you borrow it sometimes. That is, if I were to happen to have one.

I might need one of those. The second one, at least. Especially if me having it makes you go waugh again.

If you're taking my little bruddah for a ride, you have to bring him back with a full tank of gas.

It's because your ears are pinned back in embarrassment, sweetie.
ruffles

Get in here with those pretzels. I'm starving.

(It just occurred to me that the regulars on your train either love or hate you, depending on whether they enjoy the smells wafting from those canvas tote bags of yours, or they skipped breakfast that day.)

This is an abusive relationship.

You mock me, and I bring you food.

I think I fail operant conditioning.

Trust me, I'm a professional -- cook, that is. Food is how I'm planning on luring him into my lair. Dinner first, then dessert, and a nice big cake afterwards.

And if food isn't what you're referring to, well, I have a firm policy of leaving campsites in better shape than I found them, and it applies to boys (and girls) as well.

I will cheerfully help clean up the evidence of your Much-Resented European (Read: French) Cakes Class.

I'm not sure I would stand up to you any better than Riker would stand up to two or three Klingon hotties. But I approve of your campsite policy, and may adopt it myself, except for the boys part.

I am terribly devious. I put all my traps in plain sight, tell you about them, and invite you to walk into them. And then watch you do it gladly.

See? It's all a matter of finding the right bait.

Don't worry, I promise it's a humane, catch-and-release sort of trap.
